

I realize it was a gamble of sorts buying 2700 shares of XOXO.

However for the company to put out a press release that basically says "XOXO shareholders shares are now worthless", the effect of which results in the NASDAQ halting trading for a time, and when trading finally resumes the shares are essentially worthless, has got to be illegal in some manner. No way something like that would occur as it did in this case unless someone is scamming somewhere.

Now I'm not a lawyer or an expert, (I know you can tell), but someone who is an expert needs to pursue this and punish the guilty.

If the transfer goes thru it will only add futhur insult to injury. XO shareholders lost nearly all their investment. The transfer will take what value is left. The crooks are free and wealthy.